

COSMETIC NURSES

Non-surgical cosmetic treatments continue to be a growth area and it is estimated that about 70 per cent are undertaken by nurses. The majority of nurses run their own practices while others may work with doctors or dentists. All are required to be registered with their professional organisation, the Nursing and Midwifery Council (NMC, nmc-uk.org), and work to a code of conduct. Many are members of the British Association of Cosmetic Nurses (BACN, cosmeticnurses.org) whose main aims are to provide guidance on best practice and facilitate professional development through training facilities and via its annual conference.

There are a number of considerations when choosing a practitioner. Price is not necessarily a good indicator of the quality of the treatment offered: checking your nurse practitioner's qualifications, and how many years they have spent building up expertise in their field is the best (and safest) approach.
